“ Missed Grandma today for no particular reason. I miss her perspective and her testimony.

Some of my memories of Grandma Erickson:

Family dinners at her home while I was in college

Peanut butter & honey sandwiches on her homemade bread

All her flower pots in the windowsill and in the back yard

Sitting on the gazebo eating watermelon

Talking with her for HOURS in the family room on Stadium Avenue

Pictures of her mother and father at the bottom of the stairs

Her sharing a new book with me (she always knew something new!)

She helped me sew a long and flowing pink skirt when I was 15

She taught me how to poach and egg

Her laugh

She loved to sing, even though i could tell her voice was changing as she got older, she had a strong voice

Kneeling in prayer with her and Grandpa twice a day, everyday when I had the opportunity to live with them

Making her bed with her when I was little

Sitting at her vanity when I was little

Her body gave her a lot of troubles in the past five or so years, maybe more, but she did so much in her life to respect her body and keep it healthy and teach us to be healthy and make healthy choices and help us keep our children healthy. There is no magic pill, and she knew that it takes work and deliberate action to make health a habit.

She always said, "you are wonderful" and I wondered how she could tell me that when I live so far away and she didn't really know what went on everyday of my life and she couldn't really know if I was wonderful, but I just let her say it anyway because it made me feel so good and i think she really meant it.

She is an example of a STRONG woman, for better or for worse, but I think it has been for better. ;)

She loves her Savior and the gospel, her husband and family. They were and are the most important things.

I love you Grandma!
